Residential house in the heart of The Hague

The Mauritshuis in The Hague was built as a residence for Count Johan Maurits of Nassau-Siegen (1604 – 1679). He was a cousin of William of Orange and governor of the Dutch colony in Brazil between 1636 and 1644. Johan Maurits was both commissioner and first occupant of the house, hence the name: Maurits' house. Later, the building was given various other functions. In 1822 the Mauritshuis became a museum.

The Mauritshuis is located on the Hofvijver, next to the buildings of the Dutch government and parliament. In the 19th and 20th century the Mauritshuis grew into a museum that receives many visitors from home and abroad every year.

Not only the paintings, but the building itself is a sight to behold. Thanks to the creaking wooden floors, silk wallpaper on the walls and chandeliers on the ceiling.

Bring the Mauritshuis into your home

Treat yourself to a masterpiece from the collection in the form of a wonderful piece of jewellery, a beautifully-designed greetings card or an accessory for the home: a fridge magnet, cushion or tea light holder. For children, there are games and fun children's books. One of these tells the story of the Mauritshuis's resident mouse: Maurits Mouse (only Maurits Mouse and Rembrandt is available in English). As you would expect, the Girl with a Pearl Earring is everywhere in the shop. Let her protect you from the rain (umbrella, rain hat and jacket) or help you cook (apron and oven gloves), take her travelling (suitcase) or cycling (bicycle bell), enjoy a cup of coffee with her (tray) or take her into the bath (a bestseller: the Girl rubber duck)!

Flowers are a popular theme in the shop, with magnificent bouquets adorning various items. These include gloves, charger plates, serving trays and shawls decorated with tulips, roses, peonies, lilies and other deliciously scented plants. Eye-catching reproductions of all the collection highlights are available to buy: Girl with a Pearl Earring, View of Delft (also by Johannes Vermeer) and of course the world's most-famous bird: The Goldfinch by Carel Fabritius. Everything is also available to browse and buy online:

Art and cuisine are the perfect combination

There is something delicious for every taste, from coffee with the (in The Hague legendary!) hazelnut cream pastry from 'Maison Kelder' to a glass of fine wine with a fresh salad. There is always a 'soup of the day', a changing selection of the tastiest sandwiches and you can have an extensive drink with the equally famous bitterballen from the Dutch firm 'Van Dobben', always served with spicy mustard. The menu features contemporary dishes, inspired by the works of art in the museum, often prepared with home-grown ingredients.

A visit to our Brasserie is the perfect way to start or end a visit to the Mauritshuis!

The very first museum of the Netherlands

The Prince William V Gallery lies a stone's throw from the Mauritshuis. Around 150 Dutch and Flemish masterpieces from the Mauritshuis collection are displayed there, including works by Jan Steen, Paulus Potter, Frans van Mieris, Gerard van Honthorst and Peter Paul Rubens. Together they show how large the royal picture collection belonging to Prince William V of Orange-Nassau (1748 – 1806) was. The Prince William V Gallery was the first public art collection in the Netherlands. The prince had the gallery created in 1774 to display his impressive paintings. The walls were crammed full to clearly demonstrate the wealth of his collection.

Address

The Prince William V Gallery is located at Buitenhof 33, a five-minute walk from the Mauritshuis.

Various singer-songwriters have taken their cue from well-known and lesser-known masterpieces in the Mauritshuis collection.

The Goldfinch (known for the book of the same name by Donna Tartt),
